

He who joyfully marches to music in rank and file has already earned my contempt. He has been given a large brain by mistake, since for him the spinal cord would fully suffice. This disgrace to civilization should be done away with at once. Heroism at command, senseless brutality, deplorable love-of-country stance, how violently I hate all this, how despicable and ignorable war is; I would rather be torn to shreds than be a part of so base an action! It is my conviction that killing under the cloak of war is nothing but an act of murder .

– Albert Einstein (1879 – 1955)

Graph 3 indicates that Privilege Funders, with their enormous capacity to accumulate and control wealth and power, invest in land and resources in “underdeveloped” countries. To quell protests, investors call for military intervention. Privilege Funders play a strong role in developing US foreign policy in ways that further their own interests. A large share of the taxes of working people pay for elite wars of aggression fought in the name of human rights and democracy but in reality for the expansion of Privilege Funder control of land, natural resources and key locations. A disproportionate number of poor people give their lives in these wars.

Mason Gaffney in Rent-Seeking and Global Conflict contends that national governments originate historically to acquire, hold and police land. “Other functions are assumed later, but sovereignty over land is always the first business. Private parties hold land from the sovereign; every chain of title goes back to a grantor who originally seized the land,” says Gaffney who suggests we keep in mind that rent-seeking in its original form is “land grabbing.”

Arguing that conventional economists are wrong when they submit that “national defense is a public good” Gaffney reveals that what is defended behind the defense wall is land previously seized, as was native lands in the Americas. “Every land title in the world goes back to a taking by force,” says Gaffney. Furthermore:

The Lords and Barons have much at stake; the serfs and vagrants very little. Rent is what is being defended, along with, no doubt, traditional feelings of machismo and some local folkways and mores.... But it is outside the defense wall of the nation proper that rent-seeking is most dynamic and destabilizing. Military force (often in tandem with finance) is used to project sovereignty into foreign nations, and over no-man’s-lands like the oceans, polar regions, radio spectrum and outer space.

Gaffney identifies two general kinds of offshore rent-seekers:

1. Caciques, a generic term for local cooperating rulers from the native population, are drawn from the matrix of the local landholding oligarchy which imperial powers work through in a kind of control symbiosis. Although turnover among individual caciques may be high, the local oligarchy remains stable often thanks to the support of imperial power elites.
2. Rent-seekers of the second kind are U.S. or allied multinational interests, mostly corporations. The cacique is expected to assign to them, or be complaisant in their taking concessions and resources like minerals, transportation routes, communications, bank charters, plantations, exploration, over flights, and navigation rights. Native elites normally control more of the traditional resources like farmland.

“Both these groups have major influence on U.S. policies and often manage to direct large discretionary government funds to their own interests,” says Gaffney. His analysis shows how rivalry to appropriate limited rent-yielding resources leads to conflict:

The biggest gains to rent-seekers come from buying in on the ground floor, cheap, when tenures are precarious or uncertain. Then one invokes the U.S. armed forces and the sanctions of ancillary statecraft to raise the value of one’s acquisition. The three main concerns are to firm up precarious tenures (as by supporting the government that granted them); to hold down taxes on their holdings; and to avoid pure competition (as by giving preferential access to the U.S. market, or Pentagon procurers). Profits to be made are more the products of statecraft and force than of capital inputs proper.

Graph 3 shows the development of the “iron triangle” of the military industrial complex (MIC) - the close and symbiotic relationship between a nation's armed forces, its arms industry, and associated political and commercial interests. In such a system, the military is dependent on industry to supply material and other support, while the defense industry depends on government for a steady revenue stream. The term was coined by President Dwight Eisenhower in his farewell presidential address to the nation wherein he warned of the dangers of “a permanent arms industry of vast proportions.” In this speech he said that the agenda of those who profit from war is counter to the survival of democracy:

In the councils of government, we must guard against the acquisition of unwarranted influence, whether sought or unsought, by the military-industrial complex. The potential for the disastrous rise of misplaced power exists and will persist.

As pejorative terms, the MIC refers to an institutionalized collusion among defense contractors (industry), The Pentagon (military), and the United States government (Congress, Executive branch), as a cartel that works against the public interest, whose motivation is profiteering. Taxes on working people subsidize the MIC to such a degree that the United States has developed a permanent war economy. Members of Congress go to Washington to grab funds for their back-home arms industry in the name of providing local employment.

The MIC, to which we will now add the letter F – Military-Industrial-Financial Complex - goes hand in hand with U.S. foreign policy which we have previously described as largely dominated by rent-and-interest seeking Privilege Funders, mostly corporations, banks, a handful of billionaires, and their allied local elites, the caciques or vassals. Altogether the forces of these players have brought us to the current official U.S. foreign policy of “full spectrum dominance” of the world and its resources. But the roots of U.S. foreign policy can be found in the distant past.

ROOTS OF U.S. IMPERIALISM

In his essay “The Problem of the Modern World” John Mohawk states:

When land became a ‘commodity’ and lost its status as provider and sustainer of life, Western civilization began its history of subjugation and exploitation of the earth and earth based cultures. For nearly five centuries people have been coerced from their landholdings. The problem, in the English-speaking world, has its roots in the sixteenth century.

Mohawk is talking about the Enclosure Period. This is the time of violent direct suppression of the indigenous people of Europe. Between the thirteenth and seventeenth centuries, masses of peasants were evicted from their holdings or saw their common lands fenced off for sheep.

The Enclosures began after the signing of the Magna Carta in 1215. This was the great charter that King John was forced by the English barons to grant. Traditionally interpreted as guaranteeing certain civil and political liberties, the right to land for the common people was not among them. The first legal act to enforce enclosures was the Statute of Merton of 1235 which spoke of the need to “approve (meaning improve) the land in order to extract greater rent.” The land barons were of course extracting rent from those who formerly had free access to the fields, forests, streams and meadows of the commons.

The enclosures redefined land as “private property” and thereby gave it the status of a commodity, tradable within an expanding market system. Since the majority of people were denied access to the land and were forced to become wage laborers, labor also became a tradable commodity. The enclosures were justified by its perpetrators as necessary in order to make “improvements.” Whole villages were being pulled down to make way for the more profitable industry of sheep farming and families were turned adrift onto the roads. Those who did not starve became “displaced persons” and “internal refugees” – and soon paupers, prisoners, servants or soldiers.

The word “privilege” derives from “private law.” Private property-in-land laws of Enclosure appropriated the Commons for the privileged few to the exclusion of the vast majority of the people of England, Ireland, and Wales and much of Europe.

Over several hundred years 4,000 Private Acts of Enclosure were passed covering some 7,000,000 acres. Probably the same sized area was enclosed without application to Parliament. About two thirds involved open fields belonging to cottagers while one third involved commons such as woodland and heath. In the census of 1086, more than half the arable land belonged to the villagers. By 1876, only 2,225 people owned most of the agricultural land in England and Wales. As newer agricultural methods and technologies were applied, landowners could raise the rents of their lands by phenomenal amounts. As the cash economy developed, the rent money accumulated into the hands of the landholders and the plight of the people worsened. To survive, they often were forced to borrow money from the landholders at high rates of interest.

The forerunner of this state of affairs goes all the way back to Roman law which developed the ownership concept that legitimized the accumulation of wealth by a few at the expense and impoverishment of the many. The Roman land law of “dominium” legalized the usurper’s claim to land originally obtained by conquest and plunder. Early Christian leaders had dealt with the question of ownership and Roman law and railed against the dominium concept of ownership as an “exclusive and unlimited right to dispose of a thing, to the exclusion of all others.”

The original Judeo-Christian land ethic was that of koinonia - land was God’s gift to the community as a whole for the autarkeia or self-sufficient livelihood of all. The early Christian prophets lost out to the proponents of plunder and privilege when Christianity became the “official” religion of Rome at the Council of Nicaea, convened in 325 by the Roman Emperor Constantine I. This Council of around 300 male bishops, convened after most of the radical followers of Jesus had been hung, burned or thrown to the lions, was more concerned with establishing orthodox doctrines and creeds than with bringing a vision of peace and justice down to earth.

U.S. LAND GRABS AND USURPATIONS

Bill Moyers, in his recent lecture on The Meaning of Freedom delivered at West Point (11/15/06), gave a sobering sequence of United States “foreign” policy reminding the freshly minted cadets of the many years during which the army’s chief engagement was “wiping out the last vestiges of Indian resistance to their dispossession and subjugation. One People’s advance became another’s annihilation and one of the most shameful episodes of our history.” Let us review these fights:

The Mexican–American War was a land grab conflict fought between the United States and Mexico from 1846 to 1848. Mexico had not recognized the secession of Texas in 1836 and when it was annexed by the U.S. in 1845 Mexico announced its intention to take back what it considered a rebel province. As a result of this war the Mexican territories of California and New Mexico were ceded to the United States.

The Spanish-American War (April - August, 1898) was a conflict between the Kingdom of Spain and the United States of America that took place from April to August 1898. The war ended in victory for the United States and the end of the Spanish Empire in the Caribbean and Pacific. Representatives of Spain and the United States signed a peace treaty in Paris on December 10, 1898, which established the independence of Cuba, ceded Puerto Rico and Guam to the United States, and allowed the victorious power to purchase the Philippines Islands from Spain for $20 million.

(Moyers reminded the West Point graduates that after its “liberation” the island of Cuba was made a “virtual protectorate, ruled by a corrupt dictator.”)

The Philippine-American War (1899-1902) was America's first true colonial war as a world power. Though the Philippines had been “purchased” from Spain, the Filipinos had been fighting a bloody revolution against Spain since 1896 and had no intention of becoming a colony of another imperialist power. In February of 1899, fighting broke out between the occupying American Army and the Filipino forces.

The Anti-Imperialist League was formed in the United States against the annexation of the Philippines and in an attempt to thwart those who wanted to gain a “foothold” in the markets of Asia. Among the writers of that time was Mark Twain, vice president of the League from 1901 until his death in 1910. Of the Philippine-American War Twain said:

We were only playing the American Game (democracy and human rights) in public — in private it was European.... What we wanted, in the interest of Progress and Civilization, was the Archipelago, unencumbered by patriots struggling for independence.

General Smedley Butler became aware of the form and shape of U.S. imperialism in the early decades of the twentieth century. After serving thirty-years in the Marine Corps he was the most decorated U.S. military officer of his day. Butler’s powerful writings clearly articulate his agony and anguish upon fully perceiving the end goals of his military ventures. Speaking of his time in the military in his 1934 book, War is a Racket, Smedley wrote:

I spent most of my time being a high class muscle-man for Big Business, for Wall Street and for the Bankers. In short, I was a racketeer, a gangster for capitalism.... I helped make Mexico, especially Tampico, safe for American oil interests in 1914. I helped make Haiti and Cuba a decent place for the National City Bank boys to collect revenues in. I helped in the raping of half a dozen Central American republics for the benefits of Wall Street. The record of racketeering is long. I helped purify Nicaragua for the international banking house of Brown Brothers in 1909-1912. I brought light to the Dominican Republic for American sugar interests in 1916. In China I helped to see to it that Standard Oil went its way unmolested.

During those years, I had, as the boys in the back room would say, a swell racket. Looking back on it, I feel that I could have given Al Capone a few hints. The best he could do was to operate his racket in three districts. I operated on three continents.

War is just a racket. A racket is best described, I believe, as something that is not what it seems to the majority of people. Only a small inside group knows what it is about. It is conducted for the benefit of the very few at the expense of the masses.... The trouble with America is that when the dollar only earns 6 percent over here, then it gets restless and goes overseas to get 100 percent. Then the flag follows the dollar and the soldiers follow the flag. I wouldn’t go to war again as I have done to protect some lousy investment of the Bankers.

Out of war nations acquire additional territory, if they are victorious. They just take it. This newly acquired territory promptly is exploited by the few – the selfsame few who wrung dollars out of blood in the war. The general public shoulders the bill. Ad what is this bill? This bill engenders a horrible accounting. Newly placed gravestones. Mangled bodies. Shattered minds. Broken hearts and homes. Economic instability. Depression and all its attendant miseries. Back-breaking taxation for generations and generations.

John Stockwell, self-described as “CIA, Marine Corp, three CIA Secret Wars, a position in the National Security Council in 1975 as the Chief of the Angola Task Force running the Secret War in Angola, the third CIA Secret War I was part of” has given us his overview of the decades of U.S. wars of aggression, starting where Smedley Butler left off. Stockwell’s statement below and the following ones by Daniel Sheehan and Peter Dale Scott are all to be found on a video compilation by Frank Dorrel entitled What I Learned about U.S. Foreign Policy which can be viewed in its entirety at: www.addictedtowar.com

Trying to summarize this Third World War that the CIA, the U.S. National Security Complex with the military all interwoven in it in many different ways, has been waging, let me just put it this way, the best heads that I coordinate with studying this thing, we count at least minimum figure six million people who’ve been killed in this long 40-year war that we have waged against the people of the Third World....

They are people of countries like the Congo, Vietnam, Kampuchea, Indonesia, Nicaragua, where conspicuously, they nor their governments, do not have the capability of doing any physical hurt to the United States. They don’t have ICBM’s, they don’t have armies or navies. They could not hurt us if they wanted to. There has rarely been any evidence that they really wanted to.... Cheap shots, if you will, killing people of other countries of the world who cannot defend themselves under the guise of secrecy and under the rubric of national security.

Senator Church said in the 14 years before he did his investigation that he found that they (the CIA) had run 900 major operations and 3000 minor operations. And if you extrapolate that over the whole period of the 40 odd years that we’ve had a CIA you come up with 3000 major operations and over 10,000 minor operations. Every one of them illegal. Every one of them disruptive of the lives and societies of other peoples and all of them bloody and gory beyond comprehension....

Daniel Sheehan, formerly Chief Legal Counsel for the Christic Institute, says:

There exists in operation now a secret team of some two dozen men, former CIA covert operatives, former U.S. Pentagon arms suppliers, who have joined together in private enterprise outside of the control of the American government, either the Congress or the President, who are mounting their personal wars around the world... And that's the group we are dealing with right here – who're making war around the world for their own personal profit.

And from Peter Dale Scott, Professor at the University of California at Berkeley who has conducted extensive research on covert action and CIA activities:

To think of the democratic governments that have been overthrown in the last 30 years by military coups, it is almost like giving a capsule history of CIA covert operations in the last 30 years. I mean there was the overthrow of Prime Minister Mosaddeq in Iran in 1953; there was the overthrow of Arbenz in Guatemala in 1954; there was the overthrow of the Brazilian government in 1964; there was the overthrow of the Ghana government in 1996. A lot of the governments I just mentioned got into trouble with international oil companies because they tried to assert their national prerogatives over their own resources. Time after time the CIA has come in on behalf of those multi-national companies.

The Federation of American Scientists, which counts more than three dozen Nobel laureates in science on their board of sponsors, has catalogued some two hundred military incursions since 1945 in which the U.S. has been the aggressor. Many of these operations have deodorant-sweet names, perhaps to better shield us from the gross reality of intent to slaughter: Desert Spring, Provide Comfort, Shining Hope, Open Arms, Golden Pheasant, Greensweep, Green Clover, Silent Promise, Safe Harbor, Sea Angel, Desert Calm, New Life, Garden Plot, Operation Freedom Train.

Gore Vidal, in his 2002 book Dreaming War, states that these “recorded military unilateral strikes that the U.S. has made against Second and Third World countries is a great scandal not discussed in our Media or known to our taxpayers.” Vidal is appalled by those:

...forty years of mindless wars which created a debt of $5 trillion that hugely benefited aerospace and firms like General Electric. This while median household income was reduced by 7 percent. The federal income tax started out as a nibble on the rich, leaped on us like a lion in 1943, and continues to devour pounds of flesh from those who work for a living while the cost of living soars.

Historian William Blum in his books Killing Hope and Rogue State: A Guide to the World's Only Superpower has compiled a shockingly long list of more than 70 countries where the U.S. has intervened, sometimes more than once, militarily or through covert operations, sanctions, embargoes, and/or assassinations since World War II. On the list with specific details are China, Marshall Islands, Italy, Greece, Philippines, Korea, Albania, East Germany, Iran, Guatemala, Costa Rica, Indonesia, Haiti, Guyana, Iraq, Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, Thailand, Ecuador, The Congo/Zaire, France/Algeria, Brazil, Peru, Dominican Republic, Cuba, Ghana, Uruguay, Chile, Greece, South Africa, Bolivia, Australia, Portugal, East Timor, Angola, Jamaica, Honduras, Nicaragua, Seychelles, South Yemen, South Korea, Chad, Grenada, Suriname, Libya, Fiji, Panama, Afghanistan, El Salvador, Haiti, Bulgaria, Albania, Somalia, Peru, Mexico, Yugoslavia, Afghanistan, Iraq.

Blum's view is that "The engine of American foreign policy has been fueled not by a devotion to any kind of morality, but rather by the necessity to serve other imperatives" which he summarizes as follows:

- Making the world safe for American corporations;
- Enhancing the financial statements of defense contractors at home who have contributed generously to members of congress;
- Preventing the rise of any society that might serve as a successful example of an alternative to the capitalist model;
- Extending political and economic hegemony over as wide an area as possible, as befits a "great power."

In his article Unleashing Armageddon in the Middle East Dr. Elias Akleh tells us that in the mid-1970s the American Power Elite (what we are herein calling Privilege Funders) drew a "Grand Plan" to control and to monopolize global oil and nuclear energy resources, for "he who controls energy resources determines the fate of nations." Akleh says that:

The base of this Grand Plan is the invasion of energy rich countries to directly control their resources, and to create subservient governments that would exploit their own people as cheap labor to harvest energy for the United States.

President Jimmy Carter's administration had pledged itself to non-intervention in the Third World, to a sincere commitment to arms control, and to work for worldwide human rights. President Carter accomplished much along these lines in the beginning of his term in office, but in the end he reversed himself and fell victim to Cold War fever. Following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in 1980 Carter issued his famous statement to a joint session of Congress in which he said:

An attempt by any outside force to gain control of the Persian Gulf region will be regarded as an assault on the vital interests of the United States of America (and) will be repelled by any means necessary, including military force.

Michael T. Klare, professor of peace and world security studies at Hampshire College, describes in his book, Resource Wars: The New Landscape of Global Conflict, how the United States began a military build-up in the Persian Gulf area at that time which has continued to this day. The Carter Doctrine was invoked during the Iran-Iraq war of 1980 - 88 and again in August 1990 when Iraqi forces occupied Kuwait.

"Controlling Iraq is about oil as power, rather than oil as fuel. Control over the Persian Gulf translates into control over Europe, Japan, and China. It's having our hand on the spigot," says Klare.

When Iran's democratically elected prime minister Mohammad Mossadegh nationalized his country's oil industry in order to benefit the Iranian people rather than the multinational oil corporations he was deposed in a 1953 coup orchestrated by Kermit Roosevelt, grandson of President Theodore Roosevelt.

In the name of democracy, but in reality at the behest of the MIFC, many democratically elected leaders have met similar fates when they attempted to put in place economic democracies in order to improve the living conditions of their people. When the Chilean people elected Salvador Allende as their president and promised to nationalize their copper and other resources the U.S. CIA used covert actions to overthrow him resulting in the deaths of more than 3,000 and the tortures of tens of thousands. We know now that the U.S. sent advisers to help with the killings and torture.

In 1961, democratically-elected leader of the Congo, Patrice Lumumba, planned to claim the resources of the Congo for the people of the Congo. His stand for economic sovereignty resulted in his murder, again with U.S. complicity and the backing of the Eisenhower administration. The mass murderer and torturer Jonas Savimbi was then installed.

Zbigniew Brzezinski, former US National Security Advisor, describes "superpower politics" and "the American global system" in his 1997 book, The Grand Chessboard - American Primacy and Its Geostrategic Imperatives. Brzezinski presents the strange viewpoint that in order to provide the basis for global cooperation in the distant future, US foreign policy must be based on global dominance in the present. It is a bit like providing a rationale for a husband dominating his wife so that in the future they can have a respectfully cordial relationship. The focal point of the chessboard is Eurasia - the "globe's most important paying field" where the US must maintain control as "the central basis for global primacy." After laying out his three-step formula to "offset, co-opt, and/or control" the "geopolitical critical Eurasian states" Brzezinski says:

In a terminology that hearkens back to the more brutal age of ancient empires, the three grand imperatives of imperial geostrategy are to prevent collusion and maintain security dependence among the vassals, to keep tributaries pliant and protected, and to keep the barbarians from coming together.... Competition based on territory still dominates world affairs.

The book Confessions of an Economic Hit Man by John Perkins has been praised by Harvard Professor John E. Mack as a revelation of the inner workings of "our deeply entrenched governmental/corporate imperialist structure." Covertly recruited by the National Security Agency but working as a consultant with private firms, Perkins' job was to convince governments of countries including Indonesia, Panama, Ecuador, Columbia, Saudi Arabia, Iran and others to implement policies and programs that promoted U.S. based banks and corporations.

Perkins describes the mechanisms of imperial control behind several major world events such as the fall of the Shah of Iran, the deaths of Panamanian president Omar Torrijos and Ecuador's Jaime Roldas, and the U.S. invasions of Iraq. Perkins had come to like and respect Torrijos and Roldas, but his "day job" was not in their interests as they had insisted on retaining control of their country's resources. Both were killed.

Perkins says it took him many years to garner the courage to write this book revealing how he was one of the "highly paid professionals who cheat countries around the globe out of trillions of dollars" and whose tools included "fraudulent financial reports, rigged elections, payoffs, extortion, sex and murder." All of his "case studies" fit into the pattern of the numerous other overt and covert wars of aggression that the U.S. has supported or directly waged against people of many countries of the world on behalf of Privilege Funders' ideas of law and order.

Andrew Bacevich, in his book The New Militarism: How Americans Are Seduced by War describes the propaganda methods which keep up the illusion that certain foreign nations constitute a threat to the US, thereby maintaining a permanent level of international tension. He identifies elements of "messianism embodied in American civic nationalism, with its quasi-religious belief in the universal and timeless validity of its own democratic system, and in its right and duty to spread that system to the rest of the world."

Bacevich describes how U.S. militarism has been built around a set of glaring contradictions, for example, the contradiction between the military coercion of other nations and the belief in the spreading of "freedom" and "democracy."

"This combination is historically coterminous with Western imperialism," says Bacevich. "Reaching 'freedom' at the point of an American rifle as no less morally and intellectually absurd."

SOLDIERS SICKENED AND ABUSED

What about those holding the American rifles? Foreign Policy in Focus columnist Conn Hallinan describes the "shafting of vets":

Modern battlefields are toxic nightmares, filled with depleted uranium ammunition, exotic explosives, and deadly. The soldiers are shot up with experimental vaccines that can have dangerous side effects from additives like squalene. Soldiers are not only under fire, they are assaulted by their own weapons systems and medical procedures. Upwards of 20,000 Americans have been wounded in Iraq, some of those so grotesquely that medicine has invented a new term to describe them - polytrauma. An estimated 7,000 vets have severe brain and spinal injuries and have required amputation.

Bill Moyers told the West Point students that “the chicken hawks are failing you” and described to them contents of the October (2006) issue of the magazine of the California Nurses Association which contains a long report on “The Battle at Home.” In veterans’ hospitals across the country - and in a growing number of ill-prepared, under-funded psych and primary care clinics as well - the report says that nurses “have witnessed the guilt, rage, emotional numbness, and tormented flashbacks of GIs just back from Iraq.” Yet “a returning vet must wait an average of 165 days for a VA decision on initial disability benefits,” and an appeal can take up to three years. Just in the first quarter of this year (2006) the VA treated 20,638 Iraq veterans for post-traumatic stress disorder, and faces a backlog of 400,000 cases.

According to a 1994 Congressional report (as stated by William Blum, The Anti-Empire Report - Johnny Got His Gun - January 12, 2007):

Approximately 60,000 military personnel were used as human subjects in the 1940s to test two chemical agents, mustard gas and lewisite (blister gas). Most of these subjects were not informed of the nature of the experiments and never received medical follow-up after their participation in the research. Some of these human subjects were threatened with imprisonment at Fort Leavenworth if they discussed these experiments with anyone, including their wives, parents, and family doctors. For decades, the Pentagon denied that the research had taken place, resulting in decades of suffering for many veterans who became ill after the secret testing.

In the decades between the 1940s and 1990s a number of government programs used soldiers as guinea pigs - marched to nuclear explosion sites, pilots sent through the mushroom clouds; chemical and biological weapons and radiation experiments; behavior modification experiments; widespread exposure to the highly toxic dioxin of Agent Orange in Korea and Vietnam. There were reported millions of experimental subjects.

In the 1990s many thousands of American soldiers came home from the Gulf War with unusual, debilitating ailments. Exposure to harmful chemical or biological agents was suspected but the Pentagon denied that this had occurred. As years went by the veterans suffered from neurological problems, chronic fatigue, skin problems, scarred lungs, memory loss, muscle and joint pain, severe headaches, personality changes, passing out, and other disorders. Eventually the Pentagon began to own up to the fact that these soldiers were indeed in the vicinity of poisonous gas releases, finally a estimated that nearly 100,000 U.S. soldiers could have been exposed to trace amounts of sarin gas.

Soldiers have been forced to take vaccines against anthrax and nerve gas not approved by the FDA as safe and effective and punished, sometimes treated like criminals, if they refused. (During WW II soldiers were forced to take a yellow fever vaccine, with the result that some 330,000 of them were infected with the hepatitis B virus.)

Through all the recent wars countless soldiers have been put in close proximity to the radioactive dust of exploded depleted uranium-tipped shells and missiles on the battlefield. DU has been associated with a long list of rare and terrible illnesses and birth defects. It poisons the air, the soil, the water, the lungs, the blood, and the genes.

Troops serving in Iraq or their families have reported purchasing with their own funds bullet-proof vests, better armor for their vehicles, medical supplies, and global positioning devices, all for their own safety, which were not provided to them by the army. There are frequent complaints by service women of sexual assault and rape and the hands of their male counterparts. Numerous injured and disabled vets from all wars have to engage in an ongoing struggle to get the medical care they were promised.

The New York Times (Army Acts to Curb Abuses of Injured Recruits, May 12, 2006) reports accounts of the callous, bordering on sadistic, treatment of soldiers in bases in the U.S. Repeated tours of duty fracture family a life and increase the chance not only of death and injury but also of post-traumatic stress disorder. National Public Radio's "All Things Considered" on December 4 (2006) and other days ran a series on Army mistreatment of soldiers home from Iraq and suffering serious PTSD. At Colorado's Ft. Carson these afflicted soldiers were receiving a variety of abuse and punishment much more than the help they need, as officers harassed and punished them for being "emotionally weak."

It is as General Smedley Butler had said of war: "The general public shoulders the bill. And what is this bill? Newly placed gravestones. Mangled bodies. Shattered minds. Broken hearts and homes. Economic instability. Depression and all its attendant miseries."

NUCLEAR BOMBS

The malefic vision for the planet that the Privilege Funders and their institutions have spawned has reached an absurd and horrifying crescendo under the Bush administration's doctrine of "preemptive nuclear war." After the 2002 Nuclear Posture Review the 2003 Senate decided that the new generation of "low yield mini-nukes," though having up to six times the explosive capacity of the Hiroshima bomb were "safe for civilians" as the explosions are (if they bang according to design) underground.

The United States is apparently going head with its plan to build the country's first nuclear warheads in nearly 20 years. The effort will require a huge refurbishment of the nation's complex for nuclear design and manufacturing, with the overall bill estimated at over 100 billion dollars.

Michel Chossudovsky, Professor of Economics at the University of Ottawa, Director of the Center for Research on Globalization, and author of Globalization of Poverty, is a clear sighted analyst who is alarmed that use of these bombs is now on the table.

Chossudovsky says:

In an utterly twisted logic, nuclear weapons are presented as a means to building peace and preventing “collateral damage”... Even at the low end of its 0.3-300 kiloton yield range the nuclear blast will simply blow out a huge crater of radioactive material, creating a lethal gamma-radiation field over a large area.

We cannot minimize the possibilities of a nuclear holocaust. The US Strategic Command Headquarters in Nebraska, in coalition with US allies, is responsible for overseeing a global strike plan and has created a new command unit, the Joint Functional Component Command Space and Global Strike, mandated to oversee the launch of a nuclear attack against not only “rogue states” but also China and Russia.

Russia aims most of its 8,200 strategic nuclear warheads at U.S. and Canadian targets. The U.S. aims most of its 7,000 on Russian missile silos and command centers. Each of these thermonuclear warheads has roughly 20 times the destructive power of the bomb dropped on Hiroshima, according to a report on nuclear weapons by the National Resources Defense Council. According to the Center for Defense Information, if an attack is suspected the commander of the U.S. Strategic air Command has only three minutes to decide if a nuclear attack warning is valid, ten minutes to locate the president for a 30-second briefing to decide whether or not to attack and if so, to consider which pre-set targeting plan to use. Once launched, the missiles would take 10 to 30 minutes to reach their Russian target.

Some would say that a nuclear holocaust is already underway, albeit less dramatically than all-out nuclear war. The US nuclear industry has produced 1.2 billion pounds of depleted uranium waste which is being recycled in to DU munitions. Under international law, DU meets the definition of a weapon of mass destruction and violates US military law as well as the Geneva and Hague conventions.

Leuren Moret, a radiation scientist, and Doug Rokke former U.S. Army Depleted Uranium Project director, are certain that there has been a cover-up by three administrations of the health problems and cancers cause by DU. The Veterans Administration reports that well over 500,000 Persian Gulf veterans have gone on medical disability since 1991. Moret, Rokke and others attribute many of these disabilities to DU exposure.

THE ARMS TRADE AND MILITARY-INDUSTRIAL PROFITS

In his article US is top purveyor on weapons sales list (Globe Staff, November 13, 2006) Bryan Bender writes that the United States last year provided nearly half of the weapons sold to militaries in the developing world. Major arms sales to the most unstable regions - many already engaged in conflict -- grew to the highest level in eight years. According to the annual assessment, the United States supplied $8.1 billion worth of weapons to developing countries in 2005 -- 45.8 percent of the total and far more than second-ranked Russia with 15 percent and Britain with a little more than 13 percent.

In addition to weapons already delivered, new contracts for future weapons deliveries topped $44 billion last year -- the highest overall since 1998, according to the report. Nearly 70 percent of them were designated for developing nations.

Arms control specialists said the figures underscore how the largely unchecked arms trade to the developing world has become a major staple of the American weapons industry, even though introducing many of the weapons risks fueling conflicts rather than aiding long-term US interests.

"We are at a point in history where many of these sales are not essential for the self-defense of these countries and the arms being sold continue to fuel conflicts and tensions in unstable areas," writes Daryl G. Kimball, executive director of the nonpartisan Arms Control Association in Washington.

One startling example of arms sales involves that of surplus F-14 parts to Iran. Democratic Senator Ron Wyden wants to cut off all Pentagon sales of these parts which are used for the Tomcat fighter jets made famous in the 1986 Tom Cruise movie, "Top Gun." The U.S. retired its F-14s last fall leaving only Iran - which bought these jets in the 1970s when it was a U.S. ally - flying the planes. Wyden has put forth the Stop Arming Iran Act.

"It just defies common sense to be making this kind of equipment available to the Iranians with all that they have done that is against our interests," said Wyden in an Associated Press interview by Sharon Theimer published January 29, 2007.

While selling fighter jet spare parts to Iran may defy one sort of common sense, it makes total sense when hung together with the profit motives of a government entwined military-industria-financial complex. Iran and Iraq have been taking alternate turns as "ally" and "enemy" of America, like plucking "hate me, hate me not" daisy petals. The dissembling can now be seen in truth as Great Game manipulations for power and control.

THE MILITARY-INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX AND IRAQ'S OIL

In the mid 1990s Saddam Hussein was preparing to establish lucrative agreements with French, Russian, Chinese and other oil companies (estimated to be worth $1.1 trillion), excluding US and British companies and thus realigning the global energy industry. Months after the U.S. invasion of Iraq it was revealed that control of Iraq's oil fields was one of the chief issues discussed in Vice President Dick Cheney's Energy Task Force meeting with oil executives in 2001. Among the items released under court order were maps of Iraq's oil fields pipelines and refineries.

As of this writing the Iraqi government is about to pass a law giving Western oil companies the right to the country's massive oil resources. A January 7, 2007 article - Blood and oil: How the West will profit from Iraq's most precious commodity - published by The Independent says that “production-sharing agreements” (PSAs) would enable oil majors such as BP and Shell in the UK and Exxon and Chevron in the US to sign deals of up to 30 years to extract Iraq's oil. The legislation was drafted with the assistance of an American consultancy firm hired by the US government, major oil companies and the International Monetary Fund with little or no input from Iraqi members of parliament.

So much for Tony Blair's proposal that “The oil revenues, which people falsely claim that we want to seize, should be put in a trust fund for the Iraqi people administered through the UN” or then US Secretary of State Colin Powell's solemn promise that “the oil of the Iraqi people belongs to the Iraqi people; it is their wealth, it will be used for their benefit.”

According to the US-based Center for Public Integrity, 150-plus US companies have won contracts in Iraq worth over $50 billion. There remains no doubt that Iraq has been shattered and hundreds of thousands killed in a war for oil and profit, power and plunder, and maybe in some very warped minds, just for the sheer hell of it.

THE COSTS OF U.S. IMPERIALISM

Empire monitoring and control requires vast numbers of US foreign bases, more than 700 in about 130 countries. These are staggering numbers but the 2003 Base Status Report fails to mention garrisons in Kosovo, Afghanistan, Iraq, Israel, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Qatar and Uzbekistan established in the two-and-a-half years since 9/11.

The Pentagon similarly fails to note all of the $5-billion-worth of military and espionage installations in Britain, which have long been conveniently disguised as Royal Air Force bases. If there were an honest county, the actual size of our military empire would probably top 1,000 different bases in other peoples countries but no one -- possibly not even the Pentagon -- knows the exact number for sure, although it has been distinctly on the rise in recent years, according to a January 15, 2004 article at TomDispatch.com.

Discussing America's empire of bases, Chalmers Johnson says that Once upon a time, you could trace the spread of imperialism by counting up colonies. America's version of the colony is the military base. By following the changing politics of global basing, one can learn much about our ever larger imperial stance and the militarism that grows with it. Militarism and imperialism are Siamese twins joined at the hip. Each thrives off the other. Already highly advanced in our country, they are both on the verge of a quantum leap that will almost surely stretch our military beyond its capabilities, bringing about fiscal insolvency and very possibly doing mortal damage to our republican institutions.

The Center for Defense Information, founded by former top-ranking admirals and generals, reports that overall defense spending will rise to more than $550 billion. Compare that to the $20 billion that the United Nations and all of its agencies and funds spend each year on all of its programs to make this a safer and more livable world. According to United Nations calculations a $40 billion increase in funding could feed, clothe, and educate the entire globe. Economists Allied for Arms Reduction has calculated that for less than two-thirds the cost of the $1.2 trillion dollars that would be the lifetime costs of a proposed multi-layered Ballistic Missile Defense system, the entire Millennium Development Goals for poverty eradication worldwide could be fully funded.

A recent study by Nobel prize-winning economist Joseph E. Stiglitz and Harvard University's Linda Bilmes estimates the true cost of the Iraq misadventure at $2.267 trillion projected to the year of 2010.

“The big prize here for Bush's foreign policy is not the acquisition of natural resources or the enhancement of U.S. security, but rather the lining of the pockets of the defense contractors, the merchants of death who mine our treasury,” says Robert Scheer (Ike Was Right posted at Truthdig.com, December 26, 2006).

The U.S. now spends more on empire than at any time since World War II and more than the combined military budgets of rest of the world.

The federal government is not able to accurately track the amount of money being spent on the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. Nor does Congress seem to know how much it appropriated for these wars. The Defense Monitor reported in September/October 2006 that “Outlays for the war are impossible to track; DOD mixes those records with outlays for non-war costs, making it impossible to determine if the money was spent as DOD, or Congress, intended.” It would appear that the federal government has become hopelessly complex, or maybe too corrupt, to meet basic standards and expectations of government accountability.

MILITARY CONTRACTORS, MERCENARIES AND MILITIAS

Thus it should not surprise that Army investigators have opened up to 50 criminal probes involving battlefield contractors in operations in Iraq, Afghanistan and Kuwait. Senior contracting officials, government employees, residents of other countries and U.S. military personnel have been implicated in millions of dollars of fraud allegations according to a January 27, 2007 Associated Press story (Army Probes War Contractor Fraud).

The Pentagon has viewed outsourcing a wide variety of military tasks as much more efficient but the GAO reported in December (2006) that the military has been losing millions of dollars because it cannot monitor industry workers in far-flung locations.

Some 60,000 contractors have been supporting the Army in Southwest Asia, which includes Iraq, compared with 9,200 contractors in the 1991 Persian Gulf War. Commanders are often unsure how many contractors use their bases and require food housing and protection. One Army official said the service estimates they are losing about $43 million each year on free meals provided to contractors who also get a food allowance.

In The Dallas Morning News (11/28/06) Tod Robberson discusses the “contractor’s war role debate.” The target contractor is DynCorp International in Irving, Texas. With more than 5,000 employees in and around Iraq and Afghanistan, DynCorp’s paramilitary workforce deploys alongside the U.S. military. Its active and pending federal contracts have a current value of $5.7 billion. Taxpayers provide 97% of DynCorp’s revenue. Its biggest contracts involve training foreign police and other security services and drug-crop eradication.

Rep. Janice Schakowsky has been monitoring DynCorp’s activities but says that she has been repeatedly thwarted in efforts to review U.S. government audit reports on the company’s contracts because, according to the State Department. The need to protect DynCorp’s commercial secrets supersedes the public’s right to know. “There seems to be no real interest in overseeing or reporting or holding accountable any of these contractors. And we’re talking about billions of dollars of taxpayer money,” she says.

Robberson reports that human rights groups have been particularly critical of the free license DynCorp and other security contractors seem to enjoy when their paramilitary units deploy in world trouble spots such as Iraq, Afghanistan, Sudan or Colombia. Iraq’s ambassador to Washington echoed those concerns in an interview, labeling such units “imported militias.”

Contractors currently rank as the second-largest foreign force, behind the U.S. military, serving in Iraq. Blackwater USA was formed in 1997 to provide additional support to military and law enforcement organizations. It was one over sixty private security firms employed following the U.S. invasions of Afghanistan and Iraq .

Blackwater consists of nine companies. Company literature claims the company runs "the largest privately owned firearms training facility in the nation". The facility, located in North Carolina, is composed of several ranges, indoor, outdoor, urban reproductions and has over 7000 acres of land spanning Camden and Currituck counties. In November 2006 Blackwater announced it recently acquired an 80-acre facility 150 miles west of Chicago, in Mount Carroll, Illinois to be called Blackwater North.

The documentary film Iraq for Sale: The War Profiteers suggests that the company may have been partially responsible for the Abu Ghraib scandal.

Blackwater employees all have military experience, but in order to join this new breed of warriors - private security contractors - they must pass an eight-week course for which they must pay $20,000. One of their lessons is on how to break a man's arm with your bare hands. (Blackwater: Inside America's Private Army by Joanne Kimberlin and Bill Sizemore, The Virginian-Pilot, July 23, 2006)

An investigation by The Chicago Tribune revealed some ugly truth about the sub-contractors that are paid to do the menial work for the bigger U.S. and other military contractors. An international network of such companies has apparently brought thousands of laborers to Iraq. The Tribune reporters found that subcontractors and brokers routinely seized workers' passports, deceived them about their safety or contract terms and, in at least one case, allegedly tried to force terrified men into Iraq under the threat of cutting off their food and water.

The U.S. military has confirmed that laws banning human trafficking have been violated and has ordered contractors "to return passports that have been illegally confiscated from laborers on U.S. bases." (The Three U.S. Armies in Iraq by Zia Mian, Foreign Policy in Focus, January 2007)

"Not one contractor of the entire military industry in Iraq has been charged with any crime over the last three and a half years, let alone prosecuted or punished. Given the numbers of contractors, let alone the incidents we know about, it boggles the mind," says Peter Singer, an expert on U.S. private military contractors.

INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS AND MULTI-NATIONAL CORPORATIONS TROUNCE ON THE PEOPLES RIGHT TO LAND

International financial institutions (IFIs), purportedly established to alleviate poverty in developing countries, have instead furthered the aims of the MIFC. For example, Economic Justice News (September, 2006) reports that the World Bank's private sector lending arm, the International Finance Corporation (IFC) was set up in 1956 with the goal of lending to small and medium-sized businesses in developing countries to stimulate broad based economic growth. But the loan beneficiaries are often large multinational corporations. Large infrastructure projects as well as oil, mining and gas projects accounted for 13.6% of spending in 2005, and just 1.4% went to education and healthcare combined. This is despite World Bank reports which show that large infrastructure and extractive industries projects create poverty by displacing communities and detaching them from their traditional means of livelihood.

More than 50,000 people participated in the World Social Forum held in Nairobi from January 20-25, 2007. In her article on the Forum – Debt, the Illegitimate Legacy of Africa's Dictators - Joyce Mulama writes that most of the debts that hurt the economies of the world's poor countries are illegitimate and that the debt burdens are increasing. Jubilee South, a global alliance of anti-debt movements, estimates that over 60 countries will fail to realize the anti-poverty Millennium Development Goals by 2015 if their debts are not fully cancelled.

Joel Varado, a Filipino member of the House of Representatives who spoke at the WSF, said his country's debt had increased from 599 million dollars in 1965 to 60.1 billion dollars at present. The current debt is 48 percent of the GDP.

According to Moussa Demba, coordinator of the African chapter of Jubilee South, sub-Saharan Africa's total debt burden is about 210 billion dollars, which is 85 percent of GDP. Kenya's total debt burden is about 10 billion dollars with debt servicing costs of about 22 percent of the country's budget. There is now a movement in Kenya to pressure through their legislators a new law calling for the suspension of repayment of Kenya's illegitimate debt.

"It is no secret that a number of the loans were given to many dictatorial, unaccountable and irresponsible leaders in Africa and elsewhere, and the money never benefited those that it was meant for," said Nobel Peace laureate Wangari Maathai in her speech to the WSF for which she received a standing ovation.

There are many examples of how the International Monetary Fund has forced weak nations to open their borders to subsidized food from abroad, destroying their own farming industries and, perhaps most importantly, preventing state spending on land reform. Given fair access to land and natural resources, the people of every country of the world could develop to meet their basic needs without external funding. But the IFIs in various combinations with the military-industrial-financial complex have colluded to prevent ordinary people of the non-elite classes from securing rights to land and natural resources.

For example, George Monbiot investigated land expropriations on the Basotu Plains of Tanzania, funded by Canada whose chemical and machinery companies, world leaders in wheat technology, benefited when that crop was planted rather than corn, beans or cassava. Dispossessed were 40,000 members of the Barabaig tribe who were beaten, imprisoned and tortured when they tried to return.

In India, a much bigger scheme being funded by the UK will dispossess some 20 million people from their lands in the state of Andhra Pradesh. As neo-liberal economic structures of the privilege funders have clawed their way deeper into Africa, over the past ten years, the number of people in sub-Saharan Africa living on less than a dollar a day has risen from 242 million to 300 million.

Land distribution is the key determinant of food security. Small farms are up to 10 times as productive as large ones, as they tend to be cultivated more intensively. Small farmers are more likely to supply local people with staple crops. But governments dominated by first world elites don't like land reform which hurts big farmers and the companies that supply them.

Mike Whitney pointed his finger in the right direction about one important outcome of recent war in Lebanon. Writing in Information Clearing House Blog (Why Fisk is wrong about Lebanon, January 28, 2007) he states that the "real purpose of the $7.6 billion in loans is to shackle Lebanon to the international lending institutions that are demanding additional taxes on the poor, more privatization of state-run industries, and restructuring the economy to meet the requirements of the global banking elite.”

Whitney called the World Bank loan “Phase 2 of the assault on Lebanese sovereignty.” Echoing similar insights of Smedley Butler of decades ago, Whitney says:

The US military is just the left hand of the banking establishment. One hand washes another. It’s the perfect system; the US-Israeli war machine flattens an entire country and then their buddies in the corporate-banking business rake in the profits from loans and reconstruction contracts. At the same time, they insist that the “New Lebanon” be rebuilt according to the neoliberal model; the same economic model that has kept Latin America and Africa in abject poverty for two decades.

The global system of elite, Privilege Funder control of the land and natural resources of the planet, financed by deficit spending and the tax dollars of working people, may be on the verge of collapse along with the public infrastructure of the United States. Non-defense discretionary spending declined 38 percent between 1980 and 1999 as a share of GDP, from 2.5 percent to only 1.5 percent. The National Education Association tells us that the nation’s school facilities need $268 billion to put facilities into good condition so that the children are physically safe.

In 2005, the American Society of Civil Engineers calculated that poor road infrastructure cost motorists $54 billion a year in repairs and operating costs and the 3.5 billion hours per year that Americans are stuck in traffic costs the economy more than $67 billion annually in lost productivity and wasted fuel. The report showed a decline of 1 percent in maintenance spending for the country’s power grid since 1992, while demand rose 2.4 percent annually over the same time period.

Agonizing over the shift from the American dream to the American nightmare, Bill Moyers in his America 101 lecture given to the Council of Great City Schools on October 27, 2006, had this to say:

Democracy has been made subservient to capitalism, and the great ideals of the American Revolution as articulated in the Preamble to the Constitution are being sacrificed to the Gospel of Wealth.... The simple proposition of the common good that might balance the influence of organized wealth with the interests of ordinary people - the most basic assumption of all political teaching since ancient Greece - is written out of Washington life.

Chalmers Johnson warns us that the United States “faces a violent contradiction between its long republican tradition and its more recent imperial ambitions.” (“A National Intelligence Estimate on the United States,” Harpers Magazine, 1/17/07). He sees that our economy is now based on a form of “military Keynesianism” whereby the flow of the nation’s wealth - from taxpayers and (increasingly) foreign lenders through the government to military contractors and (decreasingly) back to taxpayers - requires sustained military ambition in order to avoid recession or collapse.

Johnson says:

Military Keynesianism may be economic development by other means, but it does very often lead to real war, or, if not real war, then a significantly warlike political environment. This creates a feedback loop: American presidents know that military Keynesianism tends to concentrate power in the executive branch, and so presidents who seek greater power have a natural inducement to encourage further growth of the military-industrial complex. As the phenomena feed on each other, the usual outcome is a real war, based not on needs of national defense but rather on the domestic political logic of military Keynesianism.

As U.S. Senator Robert La Follette Sr. observed, "In times of peace, the war party insists on making preparation for war. As soon as prepared for war, it insists on making war."

THE UNITARY PRESIDENCY

George W. Bush has taken the political and economic dynamics of military Keynesianism to a never before experienced extreme in the doctrine of The Unitary Presidency. Vice President Cheney complained in 2002 that he had seen a significant erosion in post-Watergate power with the passage of reforms such as the War Powers Act, the Budget and Impoundment Control Act, the Freedom of Information Act, Executive Order 11905 which outlawed political assassination, and the Intelligence Oversight Act. Cheney said that these reforms were "unwise" because they "weaken the presidency and the vice presidency." Bush has claimed that he is "the commander" and "the decider" and that therefore he does not "owe anybody an explanation" for anything.

From Bill Moyers message to West Point, November 29, 2006 quoting James Madison:

In no part of the Constitution is more wisdom to be found, than in the clause which confides the question of war and peace to the legislature, and not to the executive department. Beside the objection to such a mixture to heterogeneous powers, the trust and the temptation would be too great for any one man.

The United States Military Commissions Act of 2006, enacting Chapter 47A of title 10 of the United States Code, is an Act of Congress (Senate Bill 3930) signed by President George W. Bush on October 17, 2006. The Act's stated purpose is to "facilitate bringing to justice terrorists and other unlawful enemy combatants through full and fair trials by military commissions, and for other purposes."

Signed into law by President Bush on October 17, 2006, the Military Commissions Act suspends the right of habeas corpus to persons "determined by the United States" to be an "enemy combatant" in the Global War on Terror. An "enemy combatant" is anyone who has "purposefully and materially supported hostilities against the United States." The law has drawn severe criticism for its failure to specifically designate who in the United States will determine who is and who is not an "enemy combatant."

After passage of the Act, Jonathan Turley, professor of constitutional law at George Washington University said, "What, really, a time of shame this is for the American system. What the Congress did and what the president signed today essentially revokes over 200 years of American principles and values."

William Rivers Pitt notes that:

This administration has proven itself to be astonishingly impatient with criticism of any kind. The broad powers given to Bush by this legislation allow him to capture, indefinitely detain, and refuse a hearing to any American citizen who speaks out against Iraq or any other part of the so-called "War on Terror." If you write a letter to the editor attacking Bush you could be deemed as purposefully and materially supporting hostilities against the United States. If you organize or join a public demonstration against Iraq, or against the administration, the same designation could befall you. (In Case I Disappear, Truthout Perspective, September 29, 2006)

The Military Commissions Act was drafted in the wake of the Supreme Court's decision on Hamdan v. Rumsfeld in which the Court held that military commissions set up by the Bush administration to try detainees at Guantanamo Bay "violate both the Uniform Code of Military Justice and the four Geneva Conventions." On June 29, 2006, the Court issued a 5-3 decision holding that it had jurisdiction, that the federal government did not have authority to set up these particular military commissions, and that the military commissions were illegal.

Hamdan's defense attorney, Lieutenant Commander Charles Swift, was named one of the 100 most influential lawyers in America by the National Law Journal just days before this Court decision. The following October, the Navy announced plans to dismiss him under its "up or out" promotion policy.

DEATH THROES OF DEMOCRACY

The line has been crossed. The Republic lost. Johnson oppines:

Congress has forfeited the power to declare war, the Courts have failed to restrain presidential ambition, the Military at lower levels is too intimidated and at higher levels too well paid to take back democracy in the name of the people.

Johnson thinks that it is unlikely that the People could restore constitutional democracy via a grass roots movement to break the hold of the MIFC and establish public financing of elections because of the conglomerate control of the mass media and the difficulties of mobilizing the United States' large and diffuse population.

The only truly possible scenario that could check presidential, imperial power would be, in Johnson's viewpoint, the:

...economic failure that is the inevitable consequence of military Keynesianism....With no political check, debt accrues until it reaches a crisis point. The writing is on the wall with projected Iraq War costs of $1 trillion (American Enterprise Institute) to $2 trillion (Stiglitz and Bilmes), the enormous U.S. trade deficit of $213 billion to China and $350 billion worth of U.S. Treasury bills held by China.

The U.S. Department of Commerce reported (in Trade Picture - Economic Policy Institute, February 10, 2006) that the international deficit in goods and services trade reached a record level of $726 billion in 2005, an 18% increase over 2004's $655 billion level which was an 8% increase since the previous year.

Based on several substantial studies, Matt Crenson recently reported for The Associated Press that if the US government conducts business as usual over the next few decades, a national debt that is already $8.5 trillion could reach $46 trillion or more, almost as much as the total net worth of every person in America. There have been three tax cuts on the richest of the rich. In 2001 alone the richest 1% received tax relief that will amount to $479 billion over ten years.

And so we hear again the voice of General Smedley Butler alerting us to this line item on the bill of war: "Back-breaking taxation for generations and generations."

Johnson predicts that bankruptcy will "open the way for an unexpected restoration of the American system, or for military rule, revolution, or simply some new development we cannot yet imagine."

As this article nears completion there is a fever pitch of preparation for what is likely to be the most destructive and horrific war the world has ever known. There are ominous signs that Iran is in the hairlines of attack. Dr. Elias Akleh gives us alarming details in an article titled Unleashing Armageddon in the Middle East online at Information Clearing House (November 10, 2006):

US and NATO countries have now amassed the largest military armada in the Middle East, consisting of Carrier Strike Group 12 led by nuclear powered aircraft carrier USS Enterprise, the Eisenhower Strike Group, which is another nuclear powered aircraft carrier with accompanied military vessels and submarines, the Expeditionary Strike Group 5 with multiple attack vessels led by aircraft carrier USS Boxer, the Iwo Jima Expeditionary Strike Group and the US Coast Guard. Canada has sent its anti-submarine HMCS Ottawa frigate to join the American Armada in the Persian Gulf.

On October 1st the USS Enterprise Striking Group had crossed the Suez Canal to join NATO armada at the eastern shores of the Mediterranean Sea. The NATO force is composed of troops and naval vessels from several countries and is lead by Germany. It includes German command naval forces, Italian navy, 2 Spanish warships, 3 Danish warships, 10 Green warships, 2 Netherlands warships, and French, Belgium, Turkish and Bulgarian troops in South Lebanon. This is the largest mass ever of military power in the region, and it is gathering for a reason.

Albert Einstein said, "I know now with what weapons World War III will be fought, but World War IV will be fought with sticks and stones."

Other brilliant and astute minds have expressed our current reality in these terms:

The playwright Harold Pinter raged against American foreign policy in his Nobel Prize acceptance speech saying that the United States had not only lied to justify waging war against Iraq but had also "supported and in many cases engendered every right-wing military dictatorship in the last 50 years." He said:

The crimes of the United States have been systematic, constant, vicious, remorseless, but very few people have actually talked about them. You have to hand it to America. It has exercised a quite clinical manipulation of power worldwide while masquerading as a force for universal good. It's a brilliant, even witty, highly successful act of hypnosis.

In Dorrel's U.S. Foreign Policy video compilation former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark says:

We have a war party in this country and we've had it all along! And you can call it Democrat for a while, you can call it Republican for a while, but it has been the special economic interest in this society that's governed us from the time that we founded our governments on this continent. And the people have never controlled those governments.

We call ourselves the world's greatest democracy – we are absolutely a plutocracy! It's the most obvious thing in the world! Wealth governs this country! And wealth uses military violence to control the rest of the world as best it can. And we're responsible! And we will pay the price for it!

If we don't control our violence, if we don't control the effect of the symbol of our glorification of violence, on our children and on the rest of the planet, then this human species is going to be the first to destroy itself completely. And that's the road the United States government has put us on.

Abraham Lincoln said:

I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. Corporations have been enthroned, an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people, until the wealth of the nation is aggregated in a few hands, and the Republic is destroyed.

Martin Luther King, Jr. made this profoundly disturbing statement in his famous Beyond Vietnam speech at the Riverside Church in New York City on April 4th, 1967, exactly one year before he was assassinated on April 4th 1968:

The greatest purveyor of violence on earth is my own government.

Here ends our Graph 3 description of the political-economic system of the Privilege Funders who have brought us to the brink of annihilation of the human species on planet earth.
